Necessity, Cause and Blame: Perspectives on Aristotle's Theory:

A discussion of Aristotle's thought on determinism and culpability. Necessity, Cause and Blame also reveals Richard Sorabji's own philosophical commitments. He makes the original argument here that Aristotle separates the notions of necessity and cause, rejecting both the idea that all events are necessarily determined as well as the idea that a non-necessitated event must also be non-caused. In support of this argument, Sorabji engages in a wide-ranging discussion. About the Author: Sir Richard Sorabji is Honorary Fellow, Wolfson College, Oxford, and Emeritus Professor, King's College London, UK. He is the world's leading scholar on the commentators on Aristotle and founder and co-editor of the Ancient Commentators.
